

ABSTRACT

A method and system provides dynamic power control based on thermal sensitivity of a processor system. The method and system includes a circuit that reduces the clock frequency for the processor system in response to thermal characteristics
5 satisfying a pre-determined threshold that allows maximal thermal temperature limit utilization without substantially degrading processor performance.